The graduating class have been members of a house party at Hubbard's camp in Lovell. They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Small.

The Mutt and Jeff Company entertained in Association Hall, Monday evening before a rather small crowd. They were the same familiar actors with a few new chorines, with practically the same program offered on tour last season. Of course the principal comedians from Bud Fisher's cartoons were popular with their ridiculous antics and the tap dance was went strong. Probably the female impersonator received the best hand, for he has appeared many times through the part of Maine. The show is motorized and headed for Vermont and New York state.

Mrs. Sarah Seavey observed her 77th birthday, Thursday, June 5th. The day was full of pleasure. In the morning her son, Frank R. Seavey, came with his car and gave her a long ride. J. A. Kennedy and wife were dinner guests, remaining with her well into the afternoon. Supper guests were Rev. and Mrs. Chas. Kinney. She received cards and remembrances, which were much enjoyed. A wish her a happy new year.

Republican Voters of Oxford County

The office of Clerk of Courts is one that necessarily involves work of legal nature. I am a practicing attorney and it is only natural, therefore, that I am better qualified to fulfill the duties of the office than one who has not had such training.

Voters of Oxford County, think this over and any help that you can give me at the June Primary Election will be greatly appreciated.

POLITICAL GOSSIP

To the Editor:
The statement recently made by my opponent, Mr. Flanagan of Rumford, who is running for a third term for the office of County Attorney, "that the Clerk of Courts office is so closely associated with the administration of Criminal Law that it is not considered advisable to have a new County Attorney and a new Clerk of Courts going into office at the same time" is quite misleading to the voters and has no connection at all in the fuller and more complete administration of Criminal Law.

First let me say, that the Clerk of Courts office is purely administrative, while the County Attorney's office is strictly executive, which is a considerable difference.

The Clerk of Courts office and duties are well explained in Chapter 84 of our Revised Statutes; it is more or less clerical work such as bookkeeping for Judges, making files for new and retired cases and recording them, signing and issuing all writs and precepts, arranging our trial dockets and see that the Court program is carried along for the presiding Justice.

To say that the Clerk of Courts office and the County Attorney's office are coordinate branches of the State and County government is to reduce the condition to an absurdity. The Clerk of Courts salary exceeds that of the County Attorney nearly twice and I am sure we will have a very able Clerk of Courts in one of the three candidates up for that office.

Such a statement connecting the two non-coordinated branches of the Court has very little merit save novel and should not serve to delude the voters, as each office acts independently of the other. If I am nominated to the office of County Attorney, I should not assume to direct the management of the Clerk of Courts office and should not expect interference, assistance nor instructions from the Clerk's office in carrying out what I believe and stand for "strict enforcement of our Criminal Laws."

Handles Easier—Does Better Work

John Deere High-Lift Mower (Equipped with Tongue Truck)

If you want to do a better job of mowing this year and for many years to come, go into your fields with a John Deere High-Lift Mower equipped with the quick-turn tongue truck.

The quick-turn tongue truck saves the horses and results in better work. The flexibly-mounted axle permits truck wheels to hold to the ground. There is no neck weight on the horses, and whipping of pole is eliminated. The truck always keeps the front end of mower frame at the correct height.

The improved lift on the John Deere is surprisingly easy to operate. By only slight pressure on the foot-lift you raise the bar high enough to pass over ordinary obstructions and when you put the hand-lift into use, the bar is easily raised to extreme height—the inner shoe is raised high enough to pass over any obstruction that can be cleared by the doubletrees and the knife continues to operate in this position.

Other advantages include balanced drive gears, which reduce wear and insure smooth running; special location of level pinion, which prevents end thrust; and 21-point clutch, which insures instant starting. All adjustments are made with ordinary tools.

We'll be glad to show you this improved mower.

RAYMOND EVIRS FOR CLERK OF COURTS

One of the outstanding candidates for Republican nomination for Clerk of Courts for Oxford County is R. H. Evirs of Norway, Maine.

Mr. Evirs was born in Norway, Maine on July 16, 1899, and has resided in Norway since his birth. He attended the local public schools and was active in each sport, during his high school career, being a varsity member of the baseball, football and basketball teams for three years. He served as Captain of the football team. Manager of the basketball team and Manager of the baseball team in his senior year.

He studied the commercial course in high school and during school and after school hours was employed in the office of the W. F. Tubbs Snowshoe Company and was given credit in his commercial studies for doing this work.

On April 17, 1917, he enlisted in the army, but was not called into active service until after his graduation in June of 1917. He entered active service on June 25, 1917, serving one year in the United States and one year in France. While in France, he handled all of the office work for Major Wm. L. Haskell, Commander of his Company.

On returning to the States in 1919, he was employed in the office of the Carroll Jellerson Shoe Company between April and September. In September of 1919, he entered the office of the Norway Turning Company, located at Norway, and received valuable business experience through the training of the late H. Walter Brown, known to the business world as Buyoff Brown, a man of marked business ability.

The office experience which Mr. Evirs has had, is in the minds of many, amply sufficient to enable him to carry out the duties of Clerk of Courts in a very satisfactory manner.

On December 24, 1921, he was married to Eva A. Andrews of South Paris and they have one child, a daughter, Mrs. Evirs is an active member of the Wm. Henry Stone Post, No. 52, American Legion, being a Past-Commander, Past-Adjutant and Past-Finance Officer of this Post. He is a member of the Norway Kiwanis Club and is a member of the order of I. O. O. F.

On Monday, June 16, you will have the opportunity of casting your vote for the Republican nomination for Clerk of Courts. Mr. Evirs should have your careful consideration. "He served you in France; let him serve you now."

The W. C. T. U. held a meeting at Community Hall last Monday. Dinner was served. On account of the rain, outside attendance was small, but the three "Dudley Carrolers" assisted in music, also Mrs. Jeannette Mann, the W. C. T. U. national organizer, and lecturer, gave a most splendid address on Prohibition, the 18th Amendment and general issues of the day. In the evening a meeting was held at Spurr's Corner where Mrs. Mann also delivered an intensely interesting address.

Miss Silas Whitman was recently called to Boston as her son, Howard, and family, met with a serious auto accident on their trip, Memorial Day, to visit his mother. They were all seriously injured and rushed to a hospital. Mrs. Mabel Peano, a sister of Howard Whitman also went to Boston a day later than her mother, Mrs. Whitman.

The special meetings being held by the Dudley Carrolers are being well attended with marked interest manifest. This week the meetings are held with the Spurr's Corner Church until Thursday and Friday evenings at the Community Hall at East Otisfield.

There will be a service on Bell Hill at 2 P. M., Sunday. Special music by male quartet and ladies' quartet, followed by a baptism at Saturday Ford at 4 P. M.

What Uncle Lem Says

Regarding the Political Situation

The Maine primary election takes place next Monday—the 16th of June. It may be of interest to some to learn how the currents are running. Our forecasts here, therefore, have been wonderfully accurate. From the most reliable sources it appears that Hon. Wm. Tudor Gardner for the gubernatorial nomination will be far ahead of Ex-Mayor John Wilson of Bangor, when the votes are counted. For U. S. Senator, Congressman Wallace H. White seems to have a good lead over Ex-Gov. Ralph O. Brewster. There would not be the least shadow of a doubt about it, but for the entrance into the contest of Dugald B. Dewar of Portland as a "wet" candidate. There are a number of good and most reputable citizens known to the writer—and there must be others elsewhere in the state, who think the Volstead and Jones acts should be amended. They are not willing to be pimps and informers. They feel that they have the right to procure and keep in their houses, spirits for medicinal purposes without interference from any person or authority whatever, and that the government should manufacture and regulate the sale of the same at as near cost as practicable. They do not, they say, approve of the enforcement of any law by shot gun methods. But these questions have no place in the Republican ticket. Dewar stands no slight viavert to be nominated and persons throw their votes away so far as he is concerned by voting for him. If he could poll any considerable number of votes, Brewster might carry off the nomination, which would be a calamity for Maine and for the country. There doesn't seem to be much of a contest for county commissioner, and E. Walker Abbott of Paris for county attorney—both able and worthy men, should be nominated. Central Oxford is entitled to these offices by party usage and here let them ought to be given a pretty unanimous vote.

There is much dissatisfaction we learn in the Norway-Waterville-Lovell legislative district—particularly in Norway, which by dominant party usage is entitled to the representative of this year. By some out and shuffle, Norway has been disregarded and Lovell favored, which had the representative two years ago.

Men of all classes in Norway, whom the writer has talked with—fifty or so—would be delighted to support Mr. Lawrence M. Carroll and send him to Augusta next winter. No better Representative could be sent there. Some suggest that he be an independent candidate at the September election in which case he would probably win "hands down". As the law is it is too late for him to be voted for at the primary election, except, perhaps by "stickers"—Uncle Lem.

Miss Ring Resigned—School Notes—Grange Meeting—Grammar School Graduation.

Miss Hilda Ring, after teaching Woodstock Grammar School two years, has resigned as she does not plan to teach any more. She has been a successful teacher and it is with regret we cannot keep her another year. She also has taught the Perkins school and at North Woodstock. She is a graduate of Woodstock High School and has attended summer school at Gorham and went to Bates College one year. Her engagement was announced a short time ago to Peter Dragoon of Dixfield and the wedding is expected to take place in the Fall. She plans to work at Mr. Madison House, Gorham, N. H. this summer. She is one of Woodstock's highly esteemed young ladies.

The graduating class of Woodstock High School has gone on a trip to Ocean Park. Misses Harriett Nutting and Anne True, teachers, accompanied them. The group spent the week at Silver Lake, Friday, and the primary school and intermediate school went to Tripp Lake on a picnic, Thursday. The high school went to Indian Pond on a picnic, Friday. Miss Mary Hendrickson of the Union School and Miss Helen Andrews of North Woodstock school have closed their schools after a successful year. The high school and the grade schools all closed this week after a very successful year.

Franklin Grange met Saturday evening, June 13, with every officer present. Gate Keeper, which was filled by Frank Davis, Grange Deputy Harold S. Pike and wife of Waterville, also their friends, Mr. and Mrs. George L. Hill, and Mrs. Blanche Tyler were present. The first degree was given so to illustrate the work. A memorial program was held in honor of two deceased members, John Howe and Mrs. Mabel Rowe.

Tom Came In Sight of a Place Where the Buildings Were Painted White

The Rise of Tom Hadley

By C. F. Whitman
Tom Discovers a Plot to Rob a Store

Chapter V
The sun had risen when Tom awoke. He was tired when he went to rest and slept soundly. His first care was his toilet and going to the little stream under the ridge, he washed his hands and face, combed his hair and brushed his clothes and walking shoes, then back to the cabin and breakfast. He was soon on the road resuming his hike. There had been a little shower during the night, which laid the dust and Tom moved away with rapid strides. After a tramp of several miles he entered a region where ridge and valley alternated and cattle and sheep were feeding in their pastures. There were ripened fields of grain, here and there, and orchards with their trees of apples, pears and peaches, bending down under the weight of golden fruit. Here were just the scenes Tom had pictured to himself where farmers were thrifty and where people who delighted to live in the country, were prosperous.

Tom came in sight of a place, where the buildings were painted white with green blinds, and a well trimmed lawn. The situation looked inviting, and he determined to try his luck there, and was about to turn into the yard when an ugly looking dog, barking furiously, ran out and attacked him by fixing his teeth into Tom's trousers' leg, so that to defend himself, he slipped his load from his shoulder and gave the dog such a whack on its head with the ash stick that the animal ran yelping back towards the house. Tom was moving on when the owner of the car came to the door, and seeing Tom, shook his fist at him, and barked him in a high falsetto voice, when Tom shouted back:

"Keep you good for nothing car from biting people who are civilly passing your premises, if you don't want him hurt. The next time he bites me I shall kill him." And with this retort Tom turned and resumed his tramp, while the owner of the dog continued to shout his curses till Tom was out of hearing. This little episode disheartened Tom from applying for a job at three or four promising looking places. He thought that he didn't care to stay in the same vicinity with so violent and unreasonable a neighbor as he must be. He trudged on awhile in deep meditation, but coming to a farm house which seemed inviting, he turned into the yard to speak to the man who was presumably the owner, leaning over a gate, opening into a field, where there were several acres of standing grain, all ripe enough to cut and put into the barn. And farther away on a meadow was quite a tract of grass still unused. Tom interrupted the meditation of the farmer and the following colloquy took place between them:

Tom: "Good morning, sir. You are the owner here are you not?"
Farmer with a frown on his face, snapped out: "Well, sir, what is that to you if I am, I'd like to know?"

Tom: "Oh, not anything, but I supposed by your appearance that you were a gentleman and would treat a person decently, who asked you a civil question. I see that I was mistaken. Good-bye." And Tom turned on his heel and went on, while the man, much astonished, muttered: "What! What! I-I-I," but Tom had passed out of hearing. Tom felt convinced that he could not get on with such a man.

At the next farm house where he concluded to try for a job, the farmer's wife proved to be the real head of the household. While Tom was talking with the man they heard a high pitched voice from the kitchen saying:

"What are you spending so much time with that fellow for? You know you wouldn't hire him anyway. You had better be at work." This brought the confab to a close. Tom saying, as the farmer started for the field: "I see how it is. I applied to the wrong man. Say mister, why not let the woman put on the pantaloons and attend to the outdoor work, while you don the petticoats and stay in the house?" To this pointed remark there was no response. This pleasant put Tom in good humor as he strode away.

It was getting well along towards mid-day, when he espied at a little distance from the road in the edge of some bushes bordering a wood lot, a small stream of water flowing from the place and a well trodden path leading up to the spot. Concluding that this might be a good place where he could eat his lunch, he turned into the pine and found as he had hoped a spring of fine, cool water. He sat down near it and ate what was left of the sandwiches and fruit. He was about to stretch himself out on the ground for a little rest, when he heard the voices of persons approaching the place where he was, and peering through the bushes saw three rough looking and poorly clad men coming up the path from the road. Thinking it best that they shouldn't see him, Tom crawled away a short distance, where he could discern their movements and hear what they said without being seen by them. Their general appearance indicated that they were suspicious characters, to say the least, hence his care that they should not be aware of his nearness to them. The one who appeared to be the leader said: "Here, mate, is a good place to eat our grub as you see shall find, I guess. You sit over there, Jack, where you can see down the path to the road, so that you can warn us of any interlopers. Here we can talk over our plans for tonight's job, without being interfered with. Our Sunday night break over at Cranford netted us but a little cash, money drawers are not so rich picking as they used to be. Business men nowadays carry home at night what money and checks they receive during the day, or put them into their safes and deposit in the banks the next morning. We are not professional safe breakers, just foot-pads or knights of the road, I s'pose we would be called, and so get no rich hauls, but if we can pull off that little job at Alderburg tonight, we won't have to be so ragged on our tramp south, for warm quarters this winter, eh Pete?"

"Yer bet yer boots, old cross eye, an' p'raps there'll be suthin' found in ther fill, Rubie, he he!" (Tom was listening with all his senses acute.)

"But, where is the store situated, and who is the owner?" inquired the tramp addressed as Pete. "I never was in that village, but once, an' then I went through on the train. Jack, I believe was never there at all, were yer Jack?"

"Now" was the reply, "I've mos'ly ben with 'em who scoured a different part of the kentry, wher' the pickens an' scrippins was better then in this God forsaken region, an' if we can git clothed up once more so's to look decent, we'd 'Now, see here, pals," said the leader, "ye are to follow my directions to the letter. Ye must be governed largely by circumstances and all there is now is to give you a general idea. I was in the place about four weeks ago, and took note of the locality. No doubt the people who see me there thought I was a seedy individual from the back country. The store is rather a ramshackle concern on the corner of Washington and Federal streets, and is owned by Jarvis Benton, president of the national bank, who lives just outside the village in a fine home on the main road from here. He does not run the store himself, but by a clerk, named Luther Elliott. The back window on the back side of the store can be pried up and we can get into the building through it. And this can be done about one o'clock at night, when everybody is asleep. We can't get in on the other side for there are buildings so near that we would wake the people up and be nabbed. After getting here a while I'll go to the depot, which is about five miles from here by the lower road and into the woods across the brook till night sets in, then we can come out and look round in the dark. If we then hang around the depot as a sort of headquarters, people who see us will think we are going away on the train, west from Boston. But every one of us must shift for himself, as if we don't do to appear to be too much connected in any way, but we can make more definite plans after nightfall."

Tom had heard enough to understand the purpose of the tramps, and he determined that his first duty now was to put aside his search for a farm situation, and acquaint Mr. Benton with the threatened burglary, that he might take measures to protect his property and arrest the tramps. He wondered how long they would hang around the spring, and fearing if anyone should come up to it, that the footpads, to avoid being seen, would fall back into the woods, and he might then be discovered. Tom quietly crept away for some rods, when coming to a low depression in the ground, he rose to his feet and made his way to the edge of the grove, where the road for some distance towards Alderburg could be seen, and also a portion of the lower road mentioned by the fellow called Rubie, and awaited developments.

The hours passed slowly and wearily, and Tom became impatient for before he made any move himself, he was minded to see where the tramps went. So about three o'clock he noticed the miscreants going towards Alderburg, and he watched with interest to see whether they would take the so called lower road or enter the road which would take them around the ridge to the railroad station. He watched them out of sight, then shouldering his pack he went sliding along at a rapid gait toward Alderburg. He saw several places which looked very promising, but he did not stop to make inquiries, but pushed on to reach the corner of the clothing store and acquaint him with the impending danger of the loss of his property. He rapidly reeled off road after rod of the way, when reaching the height of land on the crest of the ridge, the view spread out before his vision was so enchanting that he stopped to take it in. To the west were high hills and to the north was another ridge, running parallel to the one he was on. Between these ridges was a valley, in which the village of Alderburg was situated, with its freshly painted buildings and splendid shade trees. Near the western end of the opposite ridge was seen a portion of a large pond, at the outlet of which a big dam had been constructed to hold back the water to furnish power for running the mills located there. From this body of water a considerable stream flowed through the valley. A railroad track also ran through it, in the same general direction and a freight train of considerable length was puffing up great volumes of smoke as it was moving away eastward. The main thoroughfare, Tom was on, passed through the village, northward and westward of the pond. The streets appeared to be laid out in squares, crossing each other at right angles. Tom afterwards learned that two streets ran diagonally across the village. The one from Mr. Benton's place to the railroad station and beyond being called Benton Street. The other named Compton Street, was a continuation of the main road from the northwest. Where these two streets centered at the junction of two other principal streets, was the main business section of the village. The whole scene was one that could not fail to delight the eyes of any beholder.

Brushing the dust from his clothes, Tom went on to find Mr. Benton—and what he didn't find, his destiny.
